At 11:55 am, Sierra Madre Police responded to lobby of the station regarding a suspicious circumstances report. Officers were informed by the subject that while out in the community, she noticed a flyer posted on a tree that was soliciting friendship from juveniles between the ages of 15 and 17 years old. The flyer had also referenced the term "cuddle buddy." The reporting subject was concerned the flyer may exploit or lure young adults into potential danger and wrongdoings. Officers canvassed the reported area the flyer was first found and removed any additional flyers they found. The flyer advertised a contact number. Officers called the number and made contact with a young man aged 16. Officers later arrived to the young man's address and were met with the young man and his father. When questioned about the flyer, the young man informed Officers he simply made them and posted them because he was bored and later realized it wasn't the best idea to have done so. The young man also told Officers that he had yet to be contacted by anyone regarding his offer of friendship. Officers advised the young man to use smarter and better decisions when trying to make new friends and dismissed the case.
